Marine Shipping Consultant

BIO

Having spent over 25 years working with environmental NGOs at both the national level in Canada and internationally at the Arctic Council and International Maritime Organisation (IMO), Andrew Dumbrille has recently started his consultancy as a marine shipping and social justice specialist. Andrew focuses on policy development which reduces pollution and emissions in the marine shipping sector, and works with civil society and Indigenous organizations on strategic planning and campaign implementation.

Currently, Andrew supports the Inuit Circumpolar Council as the first Indigenous organization to obtain provisional consultative status at the IMO; is an advisor to the Clean Arctic Alliance, a coalition of NGOs advancing solutions for sustainable and low impact shipping in the Arctic; and he is part of a new global advocacy campaign, Say No To LNG, to ensure LNG (Liquified Natural Gas) isn't greenwashed and has no place in a sustainable shipping future.

Andrew attended Trent University in Canada focusing on Cultural and Indigenous studies, and lives off-grid and solar powered on the unceded territory of the Algonquin Anishinaabeg People, near Ottawa, Canada.
